An Attempt at Suicide. Yesterday afternoon Anthony Bertheliard, an Italian of forty-five years, who had been employed in the Agricultural grounds, was discovered in his room at the boarding house of Mrs. Smith, 520 7th street, with a severe cut on his throat and saturated with blood. > . The Piers of the Aqueduct Bridge. THE STAR of the 9th instant has an interview rith Mr. C. B. Hunt, engineer in charge of District bridges, in which that gentleman is reported as saying: "The safety of the Aqueduct bridge under existing circumstances seems beyond easonable question."

This may be true, but, if so, what has Mr This may be true, but, if so, what has Mr. Hunt to say in explanation of a report made by the diver, who examined the piers of said bridge, which report was indorsed as correct by Mr. Hunt, Capt. Symonds and the District Commissioners, and transmitted to the President and Congress in the annual report of the District Commissioners for 1889, which is in direct conflict with the late statement of Capt. Hunt, as quoted above, as will be seen by the following, which I copy from page 250 of said report, to wit:

which I copy from page 250 of said report, to wit:

"Pier No. 6, north side—Masonry in good condition, except at northwest nose, where there is a large cavity, where the masonry has fallen down northward, so that a man can walk under the archway of the pier."

Now this statement is either true or it is not. If true, then the safety of the Aqueduct bridge is not beyond reasonable question, as stated by Engineer Hunt. If not true, then why allow the falsehood to stand in an official annual report uncontradicted?

As the Arlington Railroad Company has made application for the use of this bridge and as As the Arlington Railroad Company has made application for the use of this bridge and as large numbers of people are liable to pass over the bridge on public occasions, such as Decoration day, and on occasions like the funeral of Gen. Sheridan, it would seem as if no time should be lost in giving the piers of this bridge a thorough examination, also the new iron structure that rests upon them, which in some respects is a sham affair. The railings, for instance, which are fastened to the floor beneath them with short screws which have worked so loose that I think it no exaggeration tosay that one strong man could shake these railings from their fastenings.

Mite Boxes for the Poor.

To the Editor of The Evening Star:
In reading of the demands made upon the Associated Charities in today's paper I beg to suggest a plan which met with success in Philadelphia after the Johnstown flood. Boxes were placed on street corners and persons in passing had an opportunity to drop in small amounts which they would have considered too incl.

unsatisfactory to Mr. Morgan, who has appealed from the decision. It is said that before condemnation proceedings were commenced the company's representative offered Mr. Morgan $2.500 for his property, but it was deemed of greater value by the owner. The jury then inspected the ground and after due consideration decided that $1.500 was a just price to pay, and it is from this Mr. Morgan appeals. FEARS OF DANAGE EVICE.

While the merchants anticipate with grim pleasure the destruction of the Long bridge by the ice that will soon go plunging down the river they are much afraid that the sudden thaw predicted will cause serious damage to the banks of the Chesapeake and Ohio canal and to the trestle work recently erected by the Baltimore and Ohio rallroad along the north bank of the Potomac from the Aqueduct bridge to a point about one mile westward.

The officer, however, was too much for him, and a few minutes later he was behind the bars in the sixth police station.

At the station he refused to give his name The proposition of the Arlington Railroad

The proposition of the Arlington Railroad Company for permission to extend their tracks across the Aqueduct and down to 32d street meets with considerable opposition among merchants and others on M street, who claim that any more tracks on M street would so seriously interfere with business that M street would cease to become a business thoroughfare, as the continued shifting of the cars near the present market house would be destructive to trade.

NOTES.

At the station he refused to give his name and the clerk recorded him as John Doe. It was afterward ascertained that he had been called Edward Main, and so when he appeared in the Police Court this morning he was charged as John Doe, alias Edward Main, with assaulting the pensioner, and Judge Miller gave him sixty days in jail without fine.

In Judge Kimball's court the policeman charged him with disorderly conduct. He plead guilty to the charge and was given a fifteen days' sentence in default of fine.
